HECLA MINE
1983 activities

Due to the current Uranium market the mine remained on a standby status. Work progressed on collecting mine water discharge data. A contingency plan was developed to treat mine water discharge in the event data from water samples deteriorate. Monthly water samples were started in October to monitor seepage. Other work included stabilizing the pond imbankment by resloping and reseeding. Also, berms were built around oil and fuel storage areas to prevent any possible spills into the nearby dry wash.
